When you travel around the United States, you may want to go shopping. Here are some kinds of stores you will find. “Shopping malls” feature large department stores 21 everything from toys to car insurance, clothes, appliances, jewelry and furniture. They are 22 many smaller shops to serve people’s needs within a large geographic area. Many malls are enclosed 23, making shopping a joy even in bad weather. “Supermarkets” are the backbone of American food shopping. They are everywhere and offer a wide variety of 24 and household necessities. The fruit, sold at the supermarket, is 25 perfect 25 it looks artificial.

If you are still not 26 by those two kinds of stores above, you may go to “swap meets.” Now they have become big business in America. Private individuals or owners of small businesses sell directly to the public in little outdoor stands, something 27 flea markets in Europe. Many people go to swap meets first, then resort to other stores 28 they can’t find exactly what they want. There is still another choice. “Outlets” are stores that sell name brand goods 29 were used as samples, or something with tiny flaws. Clothes cost 30 at an outlet than those at a regular retail store, and when there are sales, the consumer really benefits.
